I believe the white man is going through somewhat of a mid-life crisis and decides to run through the train station and jump in front of the train. The black man stops him and takes him back to his apartment. Back at the apartment the black man heavily questions the white man on his reasoning. They go back and forth with several times the white man tries to leave. The questions range far and wide leaving both with questions they can't answer and almost making them debate.

I think this is unique because there is no reference to names, it is a bare minimum story. The purpose, I believe to make the text more valuable to the reader. The writer, McCarthy wants emphasis on strictly the text. He gives no extra fluff.

because he has so much valuable points to prove he does not need the extra fluff which makes his text special.
